| 4 | Read the following article and form your arguments in favour and against the topic:Gender contributes to Social InequalityYou have to write three arguments in favour and three against the topic.Many Faces of Gender InequalityInequality between women and men can appear in many different forms - it has many faces. Gender disparity is, in fact, not one affliction but a multitude of problems. Sometimes the different asymmetries are quite unrelated to each other. Indeed, there may be no significant inequality in one sphere but a great deal of inequality in another. For example, Japan has no particular gender bias in nutrition or health care or school education, but men do seem to have considerable relative advantage in securing high leadership positions in administration or business. However, in other cases, gender inequality of one type tends to encourage and sustain gender inequality of other kinds. Consequential analysis can then be critically important even within the large corpus of gender relations in general, in order to examine and scrutinize how the different aspects of gender inequality relate to each other. For while gender inequality has many faces, these are not independent (like those in the austere image of Brahma in early Indian iconography). Rather, they speak to each other and sometimes strongly encourage one another. For example, when women lack decisional power within the family, which amounts to a deprivation of women's effective agency, this can also adversely affect their own well-being. The two kinds of deprivation may, not only move together - be 'covariant' - but they may be linked with each other through causal connections. | 3 | 4 | An | C |

| 7 | A. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow:The phrase 'what is it like?' stands for a fundamental thought process. How does one go about observing and reporting on things and events that occupy the segments of earth space? Of all the infinite varieties of phenomena on the face of the earth, how does one decide what phenomena to observe? There is no such thing as a complete description of the earth or any part of it, as every microscopic point on the earth's surface differs from every other such point. Experience shows that the things observed are already familiar because they are like phenomenon that occur at home or because they resemble the abstract images and models developed in the human mind.How are abstract images formed? Humans alone, amongst all other animals on the earth, possess language, and their words symbolize not only specific things, but also mental images of classes of things. People can remember what they have seen or experienced because they attach a word symbol to them.During the long record of our efforts to gain more and more knowledge about the face of the earth as the human habitat, there has been a continuing interplay between things and events. The direct observation through the senses is described as a percept, and the mental image is described as a concept. Percepts are what some people describe as reality, in contrast to mental images, which are theoretical, implying that they are not real.The relation of percept to concept is not as simple as the definition implies. It is now quite clear that people of different | 2.5+2.5 | 2 | An | F | cultures or even individuals in the same culture develop different mental images of reality and what they perceive is a reflection of these preconceptions. The direct observation of things and events on the face of the earth is therefore, clearly a function of the mental images of the mind of the observer that the whole idea of reality must be reconsidered.

Concepts determine what the observer perceives, yet concepts are derived from the generalizations of previous percepts. What happens is that the educated observer is taught to accept a set of concepts and then, he/she sharpens or changes these concepts during their professional career. In any field of scholarship, professional opinion at one time determines what concepts and procedures are acceptable, and these form a kind of model of scholarly behaviour.
