Intro.

The table chart shows the amount of household earnings that five countries in Europe spent per month on four items.

Overall, all five countries spend the majority of their income on food and drink and housing. However, the expense was far less on clothing and entertainment.

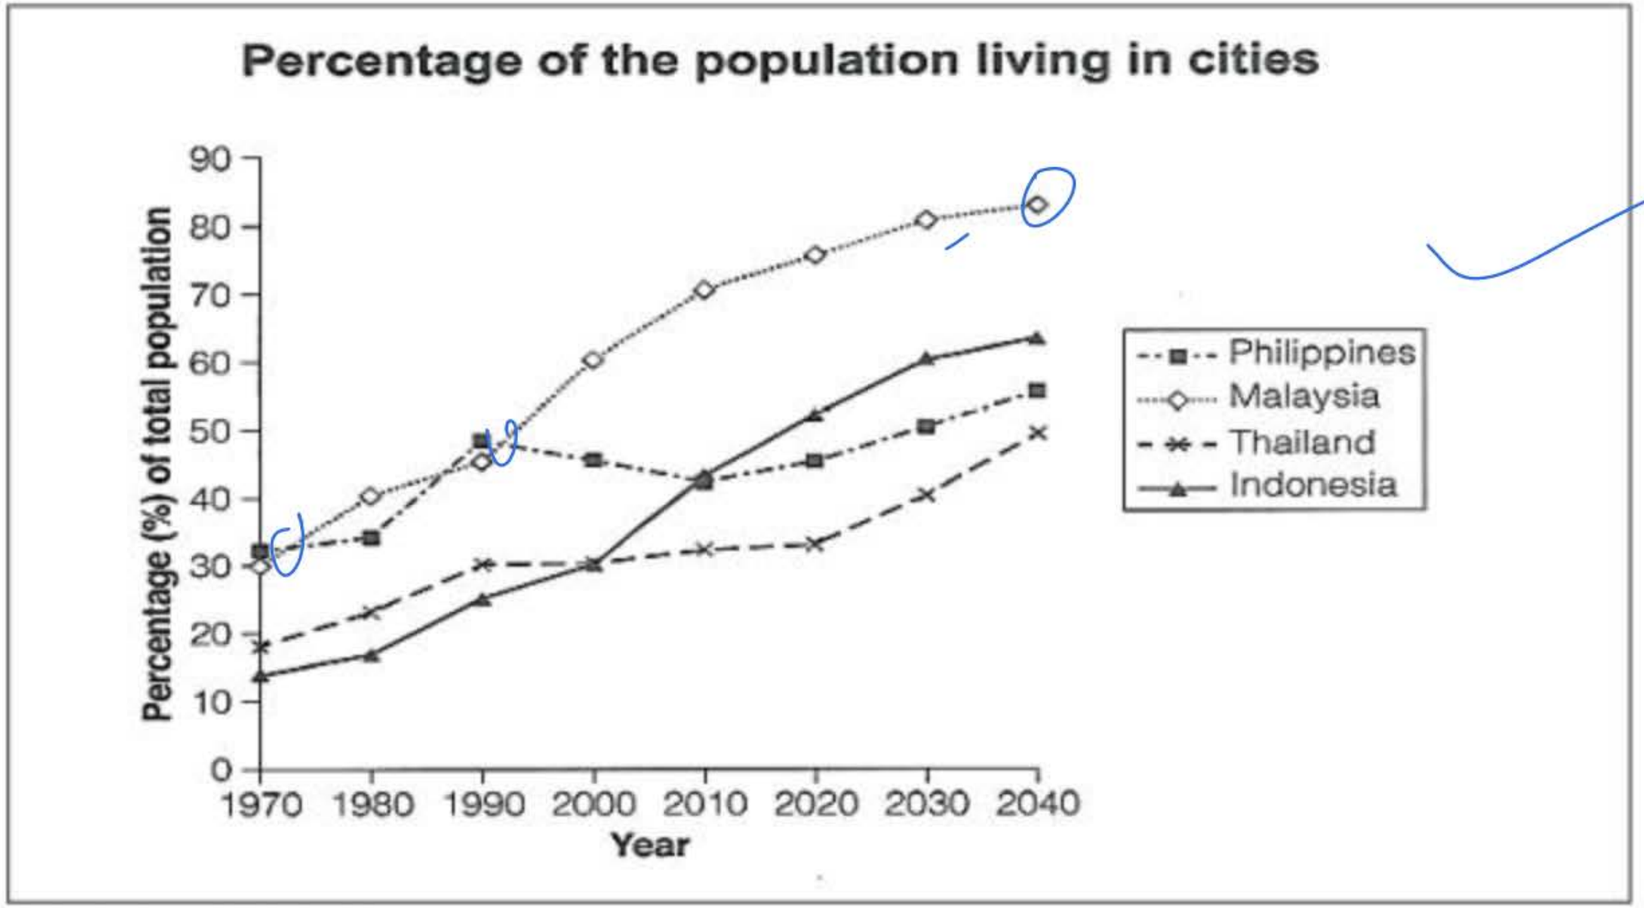

It is clear from the chart, housing is the largest expenditure item for France, Germany, and the UK, as all of them spend around one-third of their income on this, at 30%, 33%, and 37% respectively. In contrast, they spend around a quarter on food and drink. This is in contrast to the spendings of Turkey and Spain, which only pay a fifth of their income on housing, but one-third on food and drink.

Furthermore, spending on clothing and entertainment are the two items which all five countries spend much less on. Regarding clothes, France and Spain spend the least, at less than 10%. On the other hand, the other three countries spend the same amount ranging between 12% and 15%. Germany spends one fifth on entertainment at 19%, whereas UK and Turkey spend approximately half of this amount.

The line chart depicts the evolution of urban residency in four Asian countries from 1970 to 2040.

Overall, it is evident that urbanization is on the rise across all countries, with Malaysia and the Philippines experiencing particularly notable increases. By 2040, Malaysia is projected to boast the highest percentage of urban dwellers among the four nations.

In 1970, the Philippines and Malaysia exhibited similar urban residency rates, hovering around 31% and 30%, respectively. Meanwhile, Thailand and Indonesia had lower rates, with Thailand at 19% and Indonesia at 12%. Over the subsequent two decades, Malaysia's urban residency rate fluctuated, eventually surpassing that of the Philippines, reaching approximately 40% before experiencing a rapid surge in 1990. Projections indicate that Malaysia's urban residency is set to exceed 80% by 2040. Conversely, the Philippines witnessed a modest decline post-1980, but it is anticipated to rebound and surpass the 50% mark by 2040.

Indonesia has witnessed remarkable growth in urban residency, overtaking Thailand in 2000 (28%) and the Philippines in 2010 (42%). It is forecasted to reach 55%, the second-highest among the four countries. Lastly, Thailand has seen a gradual uptick in urban residency, currently standing at around 30%, and is projected to surpass 40% in the next 17 years.

The tables outline the purchases of Fairtrade-labelled coffee and bananas in 1999 and 2004 across five European countries.

Overall, while banana sales experienced an increase in Switzerland, the UK, and Belgium, they declined in Sweden and Denmark. Conversely, coffee sales showed an upward trajectory in all five countries.

In both years, Switzerland led in banana purchases, significantly surpassing the other countries with sales climbing from 15 to 47 million euros. The UK and Belgium also witnessed an uptick in banana sales, reaching 5.5 and 4 million euros, respectively, while Sweden and Denmark observed a decrease to 1 and 0.9 million euros, respectively.

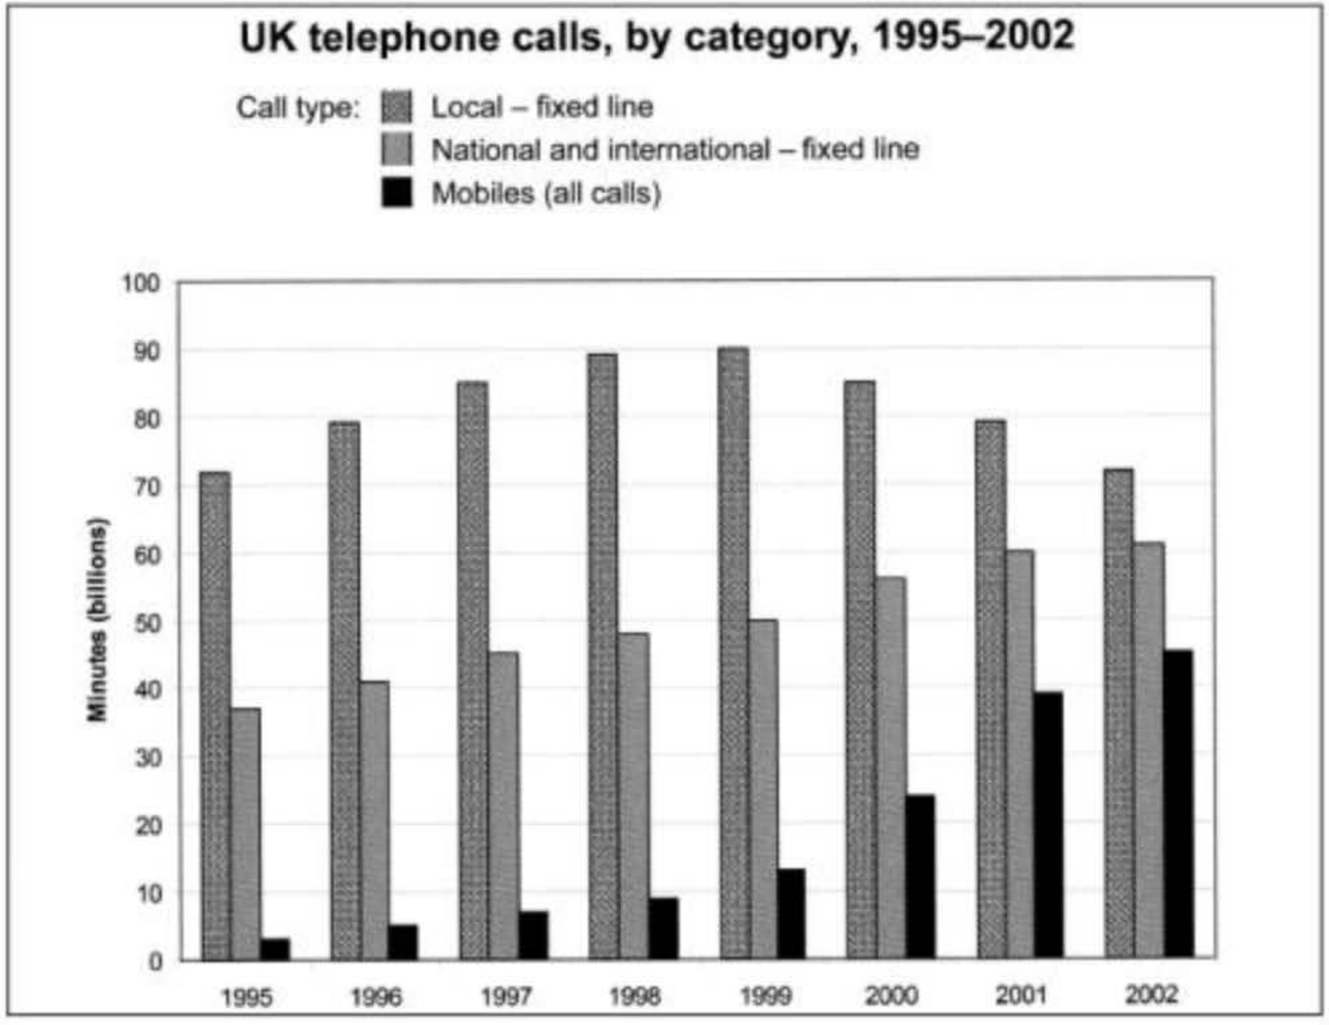

In 1999, coffee purchases in the UK amounted to only 1.5 million euros. However, by 2004, this figure skyrocketed to 20 million euros, marking the highest among the five countries that year. While Switzerland held the top spot in coffee purchases in 1999 with 3 million euros, its growth was relatively modest, reaching 6 million euros in 2004. Denmark, Belgium, and Sweden also experienced slight increases in coffee purchases in 2004, amounting to 2, 1.7, and 1 million euros, respectively.

The diagram below shows how instant noodles are manufactured.

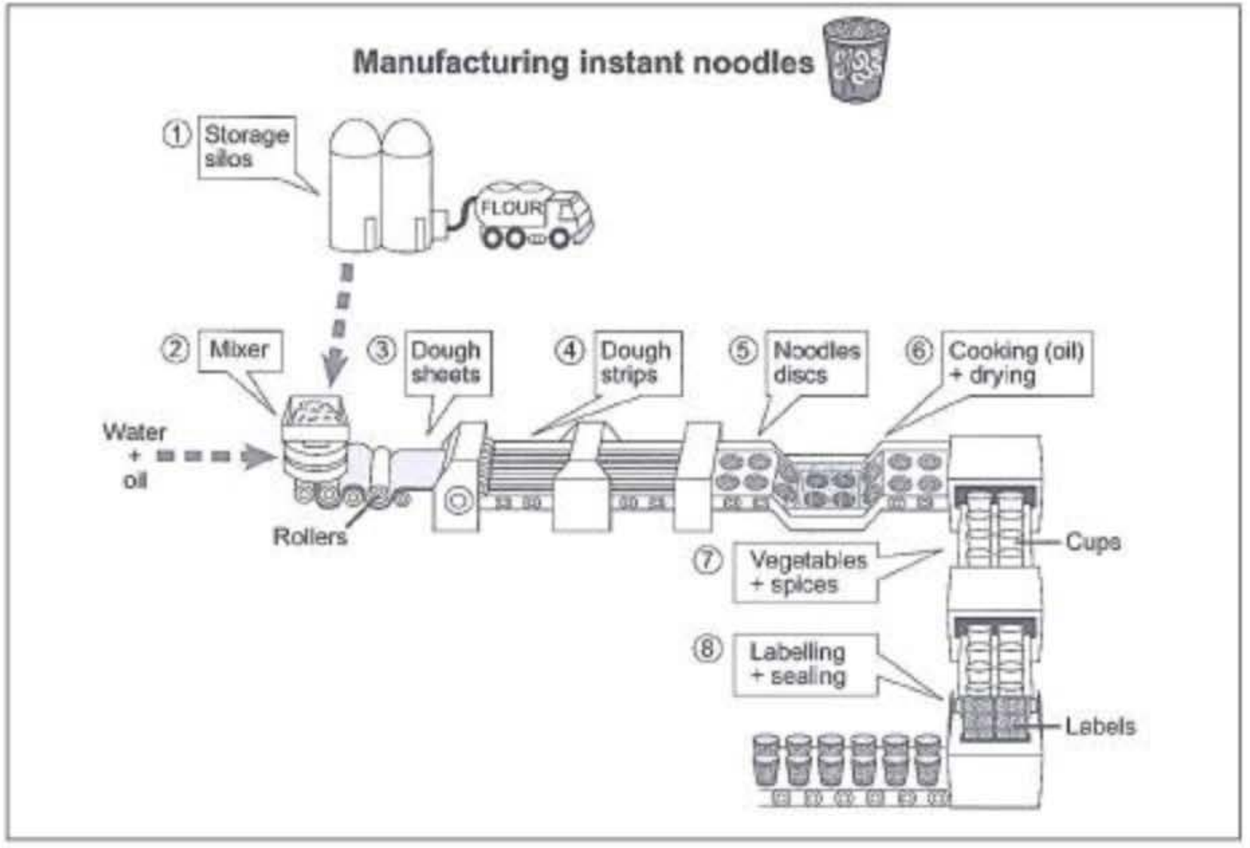

Summarise the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

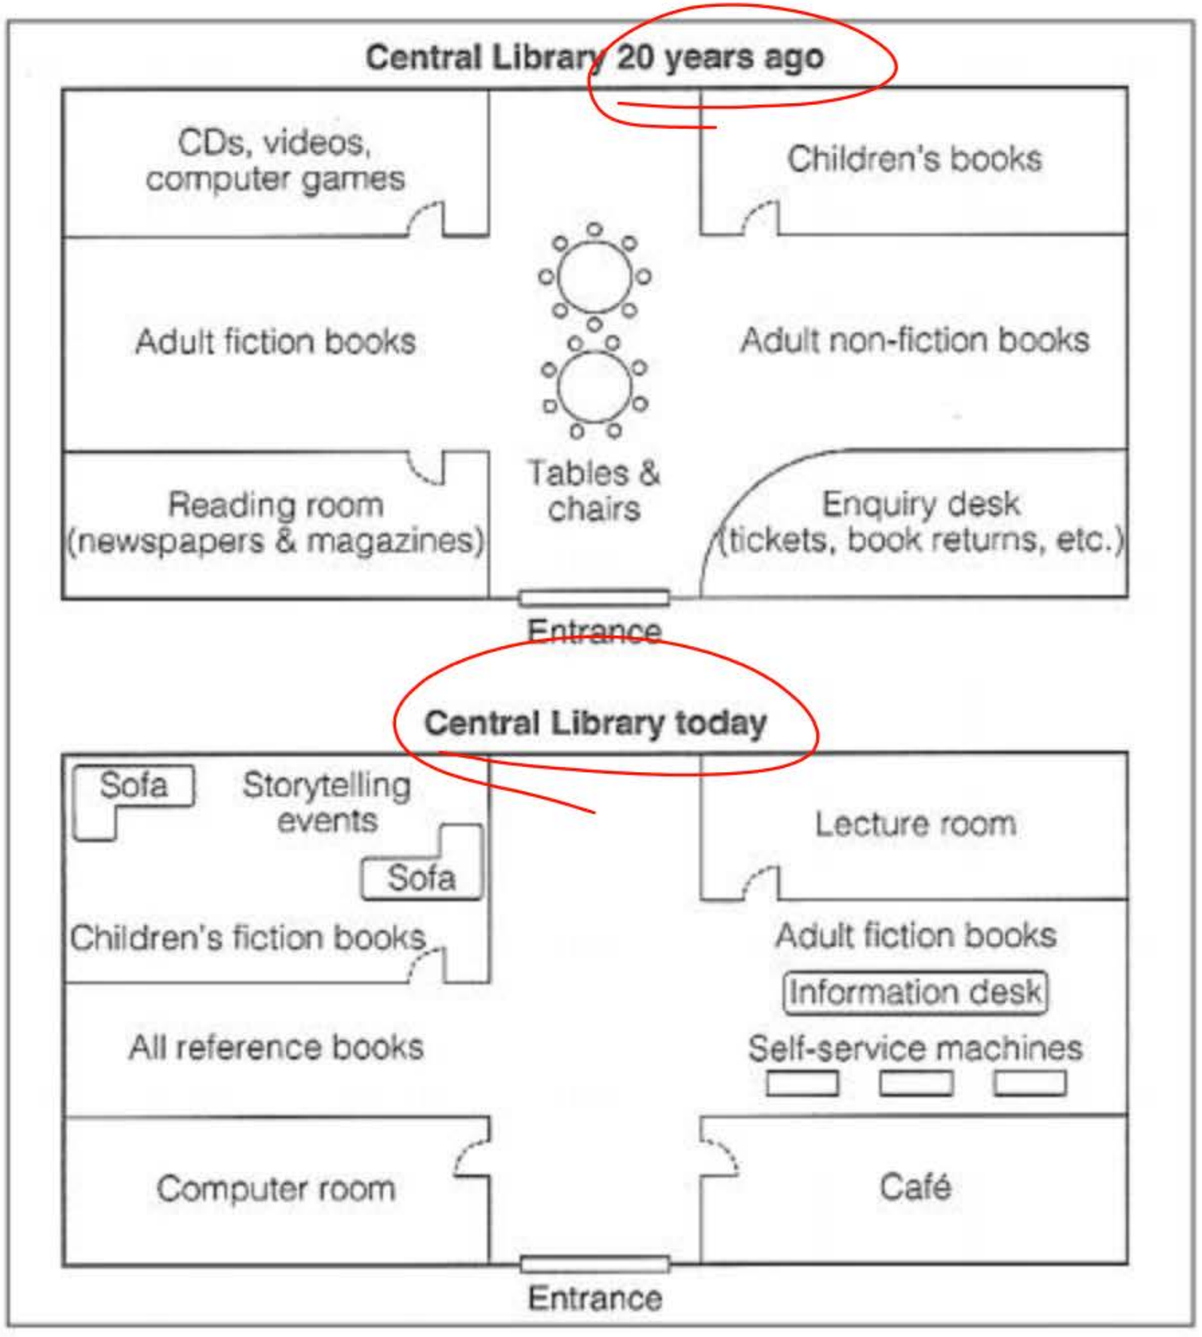

The diagram illustrates the various stages involved in the manufacturing of instant noodles.

Overall, there are a total of 8 stages in this process, beginning with the storage of flour in silos and culminating in the labeling and sealing of cups.

The process begins with flour being pumped from a truck into two silo towers for storage. Subsequently, the flour is sent to a mixer, where it is blended with a combination of water and oil. The next stage involves rolling the mixture repeatedly to form dough sheets, which are then stripped into separate narrow and long pieces.

In the fifth stage of the process, these strips are molded into many noodle discs, which are then cooked in oil and left for drying. Following this, vegetables and spices are added to these dried noodle discs before they are packed into various cups. Finally, the process concludes with the cups being labeled and sealed.

The diagram below shows the floor plan of a public library 20 years ago and how it looks now.

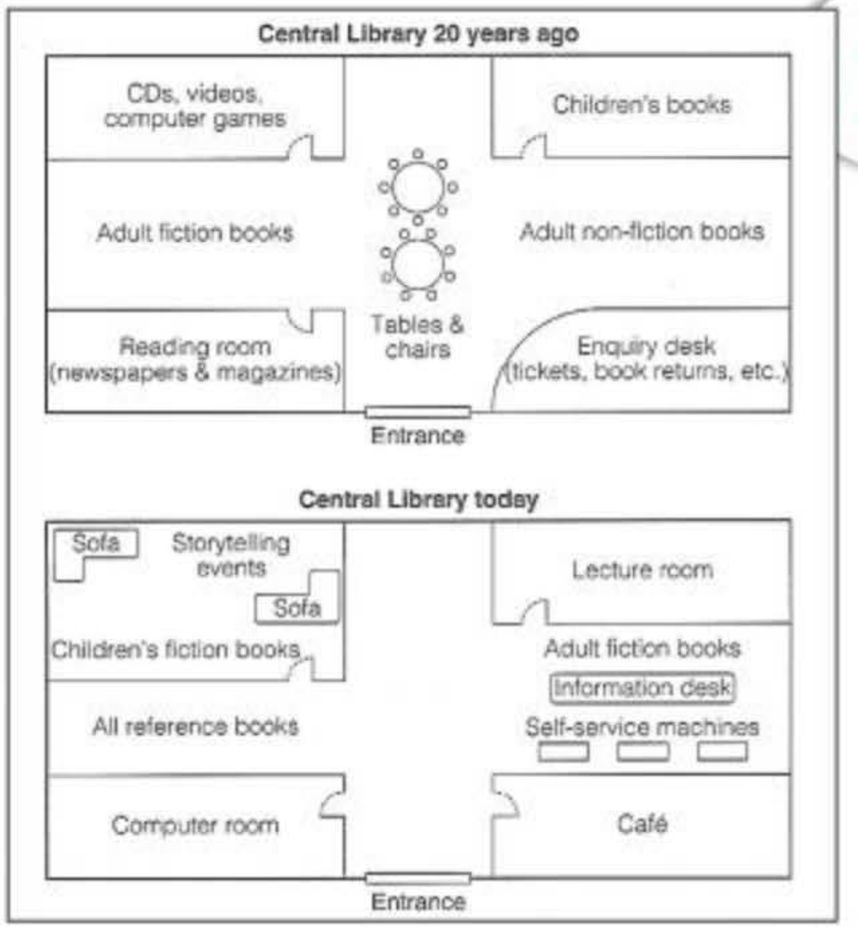

Summarise the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

The diagram illustrates the floor plan of a central library, contrasting its layout twenty years ago with its current configuration.

From an overall perspective, it is evident that the library now features a more spacious design, with a notable emphasis on integrating technology, self-service facilities, and recreational areas.

Two decades ago, the most prominent difference was the presence of two sets of tables and chairs immediately upon entering the library, which have since been removed. Adjacent to these tables, there used to be a reading room housing newspapers and magazines; however, this space has been repurposed into a computer room. Above this area, the section previously designated for adult fiction has been transformed into a zone housing all reference materials. Additionally, the former media room, which housed CDs, videos, and games, has been replaced by an expanded children's area, now equipped with sofas and designated for storytelling events.

Probing ahead, the former children's area, located in the upper left corner of the library, has been converted into a lecture room. Directly below this lecture room, there is now a section for adult fiction, featuring a long information desk and three self-service machines. The latest addition to the library's layout is a café, which now occupies the space previously used as an inquiry

Paragraph 3 - Bullet point 2

Paragraph 4 - Bullet point 3

4 Para

Closing remark: (I look forward to hearing from you etc.)

Ending: (Yours sincerely, Kind regards, All the best etc.)

Your name

Sample Response:

Dear Sir/Madam,

I am writing to express my disappointment with the service I received during my recent stay at your hotel, the Sunshine Inn, from 1st May to 3rd May.

Unfortunately, throughout my stay, I encountered several issues that significantly impacted my experience. Firstly, the air conditioning in my room was malfunctioning, resulting in uncomfortably warm temperatures and disrupted sleep. Additionally, I found the cleanliness of the room to be substandard, with visible dust and stains on surfaces and furnishings. These issues greatly affected my comfort and enjoyment during my stay at your hotel. As a paying guest, I expected a higher level of service and accommodation.

I kindly request that the hotel management take immediate action to address these issues. Specifically, I would appreciate it if the air conditioning system in my room could be repaired or replaced promptly. Furthermore, I urge the housekeeping staff to improve the cleanliness standards to ensure a more pleasant stay for future guests.

Thank you for your attention to this matter. I trust that you will take the necessary steps to rectify these issues and uphold the reputation of your establishment.

Yours sincerely
Kathy John
